BRITISH COSTS REACH LOWEST MARK SINCE 1914

Decline Handicaps Treasury Which Has to Pay Debts in High-Priced Gold

AMERICAN BUSINESS SITUATION INVOLVED

Inflation of Commodity Rates Through Speculation Would Halt Falling Prices Abroad

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR LONDON-The cost of living in Great Britain has now reached its lowest point since the upward trend started soon after the outbreak of the war in 1914. The Ministry of Labor has just announced its index number, which shows that at the beginning of May the composite figure for all Items, including food, rent, clothing, fuel, light, etc., was 61 per cent above the level for July, 1916. which is taken as 100. This compares with 62 per cent the month previously and 64 per cent a year ago, showing the steady decrease. The high point was reached in 1920, when the figure climbed above 200. By the beginning of 1921 it had dropped to 165 and has continued to go down, although the rate of de-crease for the past three years has been exceedingly slow. For food alone the figure is exactly 50 per cent above the 1914 cost. It is the general belief that this cost of living de-crease will continue because of the growing scarcity of gold.

The only thing likely to stop this decline in living prices, in the opinion of leading British economists, decline in living prices, in the opinion of leading British economists, would be a large-scale speculation and price inflation of commodities in the United States. For some months there has been a prevalent impression in Britain that American speculators, irritated by the efforts of the Pederal Reserve banks, to discourage speculation on the stock exchanges, would turn to commodities. This view was seemingly confirmed when the price of copper took such a meteoric climb recently.

While every individual wishes to see the cost of living as it affects him personally go down, such a movement has very grave features in other ways. Periods of declining prices are never those in which business activity is encouraged and are generally characterized by a marked indisposition on the part of business men to undertake new projects.

Senator Declares Argument About Loss of Profits Carries No Weight

How can the nations of the world make the Pact of Paris most effective? Should the United States and other powers, having re-nounced icar, continue to ship arms and make loans to belligerent nounced var, continue to ship arms and make loans to belligerent countries? How does the growing interdependence of world trade affect the peace movement? These and other important questions af-fecting world peace and the opera-tion of the Pact of Paris are dis-cussed in a series of articles, of which the following is the fifth.

By THEODORE E. BURTON United States Senator from Ohio

Objections to the resolution formu-Objections to the resolution formu-lated by me for the United States to enforce an embargo of arms and munitions against belligerents may be grouped under several classes: First—Those who emphasize the profits from domestic manufacture of the articles, the exportation of which the resolution seeks to forbid. Second-The cessation of shipments to belligerents in time of war ments to belligerents in time of war would very much hamper private manufacture of arms, and so forth: BALTIMORE MAY Zeppelin Tries Landing in France; PALACE OF STEEL manufacturers and dealers in this country, in order to have a sufficient volume of business, must rely on the demands of foreign beligerents. Only Affects Times of War

It is to be noted that the resolu tion places no restriction upon exportations in time of peace. Indeed, in case the popular opinion of the country should favor one belligerent as against another or might favor the removal of all restrictions upon both belligerents, Congress might give its consent for the exportation of the munitions and implements described in the measure. The same answer serves for both questions: It is unworthy of the United States that profits should be derived from the calamities of war.

A third argument is that if we should forbid the selling of arms, and should forbid the selling of arms, and so forth, to belligerents, neutral nations, and, of course, belligerents as well would forbid the selling to us of necessary implements of warfare, and thus we should be disabled in case of war.

There is perhaps more plausibility in this argument than in either of the other two; but, in the first place, it is altogether improbable that a neutral nation, in case we should adopt the principles embodied in this resolution, having military or naval supplies for sale, would refuse to (Continue). Closely akin to the traffic problem is that of reducing accidents and of placing responsibility when mishaps occur. Massachusetts has attempted to regulate the latter question through compulsory insurance; Maryland, with other states, has been watching this experiment and does not appear inclined to try it out. The Automobile Club of Maryland has advanced a plan developed by H. M. Lucius, secretary of the club, which is similar to the safety-responsibility law advocated by the American Automobile Association.

The scheme does not entail compulsory insurance, but requires pledging responsibility in cast of accident with the risk of losing one's license if damages are not paid. Recipitation of the most exposed of the machinery of the fole is that of reducing accidents and of stations in the world.

Hitherto it has taken a period of from five to seven years to make an expert cutter, while with this machine a few weeks' training will, it is claimed, be sufficient.

The boys were seen cutting and polishing sapphires which are the next hardest stones to diamonds, and which are found in considerable quantities in Australia and about 70 per cent of the world's opal supplies also come from there, including the black opal which has just come into fashion. Sapphires, apart from their qualities as gems for adorn-ment, are very largely used as bear-ings for delicate instruments, such as watches, clocks, and marine and aircraft instruments. If this industry of gem-cutting could be brought back to England, it would, it is claimed, soon employ up to 1000 men.

has been done to meet these piedges, a policy which has led women to voice their claims in a louder way. In 1925 the Chamber of Deputies passed a bill giving women the rich to vote in municipal elections, but the presidential decree required to render this act valid was not issued. In a recent declaration, Mr. Venizelos said that Greek women have reached a stage which gives them full right to participate in municipal elections at least. Opinion is greatly divided over the question. Those averse to woman suffrage say they cannot understand why women wish to drop family during for what they consider "a manisiple". ARABIC SCRIPT FAVORED

JERUSALEM-Hebrew in Arabic characters is suggested by an Arab characters is suggested by an Arab language newspaper to Jews who favor the scrapping of the Hebrew alphabet and substituting for it the Latin script. It is argued that the Latin alphabet is as unsuitable for the Hebrew language as it is for the Arabic, and if the Jews desire a more universal script they would do well to adopt the Arabic.

This step, the paper says, would increase the number of readers of Arabic among Jews, and incidentally bring the two races nearer together.

that it encourages one. And Hardy said he was not a philosopher. Much can be overlooked, much must be overlooked in a man who admits that. What men so easily call the universe was too great for Hardy to make conclusions about. At least he did not make enough of them to build for himself or others a philosophy. In so far as he did make conclusions about the world at large he seems to have made mistaken ones. These are the things which one must learn to overlook in Hardy. Else there will be an explosion.

His poetry has worth because it is a mirror, He disclaims having a mesa mirror, He disclaims having a mes-sage. Some time ago I read the list of a group of poets who were de-scribed as preacher-poets. I do not remember that Hardy's name was in the list. Now that I have thought through to the reason for my irrita-tion in reading his poetry, I find that it arises just at the place where he ceases to be Hardy. He knows how to portray; he knows how to pity; but portray; he knows how to pity; but he does not seem to know how to philosophize. He can etch, but he cannot explain. When he leaves the

According to Freeman, in Burning white against the warm will have none of it. The step from humour which makes it possible for a will have none of it. The step from dislike to dismission is easy. And many take it. I have, more than once. Yet, more than once, I have read on to the end a book which I disliked. That is sometimes a means of enlightenment. He is a poor sort of reader who reads only for enter tainment. Sometimes, as Hugh Walpole has shown us, we read for fun, and sometimes for education.

To particularize. In evaluating recently the worth to me of Thomas returning to him again and again, returning to him again a Hardy as a poet I found that I was returning to him again and again, not so much for fun; or education, but because he irritated me. Frankly I dislike whole-heartedly the poetry of Thomas Hardy. Occasionally I find myself reading a poem of his with some softening gleam-of love. But as a rule I experience feelings not akin to inspiration. Added acquaintance gives me the more reason, yet I still keep on reading him. Truly, this-is indeed an unusual sort of compliment. Such reading is worth an explanation. I have opened the works

Seeking the explanation of these strange actions and reactions on my part I find it to lie partially in the fact that I have read a great deal concerning the man himself, as well as much of his poetry. Had I known nothing of the man I would have known even less of his poetry. Hady is so applogetically modest that it encourages one And Hardy is alone, a portrayer.

The final worth of Hardy is not that he had any truth to tell; it is high shelf of rock and plunged in a white, foaming cataract into a deep densely wooded gorge. I... was glad of an excuse to rest, and the strangely piqued when men charged in the head of this spot was not only an excuse, but an invitation. For half an hour or more I had been sitting at the head of the cataract, looking down into the gorge, my eyes about on a level with the tops of the tallest that, what was he then? I have lived long enough to know the deep truth expressed in Longfellow's divining words: hemlocks; and my eyes were fixed idly upon the surface of this pool when I became aware of a bird of utmost brilliancy—a bird so vivid, so unbelievably radiant and splendid,

Hardy could not see the sunshine for looking at the shadows. He trod to the end "the gloomy aisles of this wailful world," seeing little else than "the mournful many sidelese than "the mournful many sideleses of things." Summer Schools The purely physical element in sing-ing, while a potent factor, is merely the human mentality impressing it-self on the vocal mechanism.

In studying a song the singer mus find the established significance of same and its correct expression through the medium of the music. Music that is worth while should evoke an uplifting imagery in the listener, thus carrying him into the realm of the infinite, which may be considered the purpose of all genuine musical compositions.

The singer should not be content with the pedantries of pseudo-schol-arship which reiterates from textbook to textbook and seminar to seminar the old doctrinal ideas. While appreciating all that is heautiful and lasting in traditional meth-ods of singing, nevertheless he must he alert, progressive and consistent with the advanced musical appreciation of the present age.

Those of the musical fraternity tract from the high motives of many camp directors; there is, surely, have returned home. "The patterns are not drawn on but a number of traditional shapes, called 'units,' such as the 'leaf,' the 'tulip,' the 'chain,' the 'feather,' are cut in stiff paper and these patterns are handed on for cenerations. The guilters compose a generations. The quilters compose a new design for every quilt by laying the units on the work and scratching round them with a needle. Nobody instructs the workers. elaborately quilted, had probably been done in about three weeks by an expert quilter whose services are much in demand as a teacher in women's institutes where a considerable effort is being made to encourage this fascinating craft.

In Durham "Quilting Bees" are held among the women themselves where one experienced worker works at a frame with two or three learners. In Wales there are "Quilting Clubes" into which the women pay a small weekly sum to buy material for the professional quilter to make into quilts which the members of the club are given in rotation. This helps to keep the quilters at work.

Sateen is used for the majority of the quilts and it is surprising how well it looks, and it washes beautifully.

"People often supply their own material," said Miss Rose, "and we took a great many orders at the exception. Several people who had beautiful old houses ordered three or four of these lovely Old World quilts. We also had many orders for cot and pram covers, and for sofs covers. An aircrast carrier must above all things have speed, and ample space to house the manifold activities necessary to keep a fleet of planes always ready for service, in addition to the requirements of the ship itself.

It must have a margin of speed over the other vessels in a battle fleet, so that it can overtake the fleet after each excursion away from it. These digressions are necessary to allow the planes to take off and to land, since for both, the carrier must be headed straight into the wind. This secures greater speed for

SISTER airplane carriers, the the planes with relation to the air, and less speed relative to the carrier, thus allowing the planes to land on the flight deck in a comparatively Electrically Driven Speeders The Lexington and Saratoga have established world records for speed. They are electrically driven, and have the equivalent of 180,000 horse-a runway nearly 900 feet long ex-tending from stem to stern. On the forward part, planes are parked in rows, ready to take off in rapid suc-cession. The light fighting planes are placed nearer the bow than the heavy bombing planes, since the former can take off in less space. There is also a catapult near the bow for launching seaplanes.

Behind this area is the space devoted to servicing the planes. Here they are refueled and minutely inected before they are sent forward be flown. The planes are sent up to the servicing area from the storage "hangars" below by means of elevators which come flush with the flying deck, leaving an unbroken flying surface. The craft are inspected here after landing also, as they pass for-ward from the landing area to take arresting gears. The construction and operation of this mechanism is guarded with great secrecy. For this reason no one is allowed to take lose-up pictures of the flying deck. It is generally known, however, that the arresting gear comprises a series of cables strung transversely across the deck. By means of hooks on the landing gears of the planes, these cables are engaged as the plane lands. The mechanism is so devised lands. The mechanism is so devised that a progressively stronger retardation is exerted to slow down the plane without causing it to nose over. On planes used on carriers, the landing gear is so located in relation to the center of gravity, that there is little chance of this happening.

Safety Precautions

Elaborate precautions have been taken to insure safe landings on the carriers. An inclined ramp at the stern makes it possible for planes to land without danger in the event that they come in a little too low. Even if one approaches too low to land on the ramp, and crashes into the ship, it will be caught in a colli-sion net suspended below the ramp for just such an emergency. In appearance, the Lexington and Saratoga are radically different from the conventional battleships and

To offset this great weight on the starboard side of the vessel, the fuel tanks are built in on the port side. These tanks hold vast stores of gasoline and oil, and are so devised that when fuel is drawn out in large quantities, water flows in to take its place. Thus the tanks are always full, and the weight is unvarying.

THE ONLY 18-HOLE GOLF COURSE IN CAPE MAY COUNTY

CAPE MAY COUNTY

Ten minutes by motor from Wildwood over concrete highways to a course that is sporty and open for play the year round. Come down and give Old Man Par a battle. The first hole will convince you. When your second shot—a nice long brassie—drops on the green—and you rush up to try for a birdie—and find a marvelous, velvety green—you realize why so many tournaments are played here—and why the Wildwood Golf Course is the topic of golfers everywhere.

RAW SUGAR PRICES HOVERING AROUND THEIR LOWEST LEVEL

With prices of raw sugar hovering around their rock-bottom lows, there is considerable relevancy in the now popular reference to the sweet commodity as the "world's cheapest food." From housewife, candy manufacturer, and sugar consumer generally, cheap sugar, raw or refined, will elicit no complaint. The Cuban producer, however, finds himself in a most unfavorable position, since the raw artifavorable position since the raw artifavorable position. however, finds nimed in a most of favorable position, since the raw article is selling currently for less than the cost of production, which, for the largest Cuban concerns, was around 2.149 cents a pound in 1928.

The following table shows the present depressed state of the raw sugar market:

Ally 218c 178c 29c 29c 1.79c
Ally 22c 18d 29c 28o 1.83
September, 22c 18d 40 252 1.89
December, 22n 190 40 244 194
January 22c 1.92 24 2.11 195
March 220 197 23 290 201
While the current low prices of the commodity represent, in part at least, efforts to relieve warchouse congestion owing to the rapidity of Cuban production this year, the large world crop, in prospect this season is perhaps the main price depressant.

MECHANIZATION TAKES PLACE OF PICK AND MULE

Improvements in Working System Slogan of American Mining Convention

BPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR CINCINNATI. O .- Onee upon a time man, a mule and a pick and shovel constituted a coal mine outfit. But "mechanization," marking a new era in the mining industry, is making fast progress and was the chief slosan advanced by the practical coal operators attending the manufacturers' division meeting of the American Mining Congress here.

"Mechanization" means the operators are putting machines to work in place of the old methods, in an effort, they explained, to cut costs, raise wages, increase profits, rehabiltoo, that miners must have education and intelligence to handle machines and direct power.

"Machines, of course, But what about the men?" was the interjection offered by H. W. Showalter, Fairmont, W. Va., president of the Continental Coal Company, in a warning to the operators. He seemed to think the human computer of the cities. the human economics of the situation were at least as vital a factor as more machines and lowered pro-duction of coal."

Millions Spent in Developing

"Millions of dollars have been spent in developing and experiment-ing with machinery to displace man-power in the mine," he asserted. "The machinery we install the greater will be our over-production and the more idle labor will have to be cared for otherwise. Man labor be cared for otherwise. Man labor Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce must be utilized, otherwise a crisis here. More than 250 airport manwill confront us more serious than agers, architects, engineers and goviduction of coal.

A Longstreth medal to Dr. Konrad Jasschitz, of Germany, for developing a waterless gas tank.

A Longstreth medal to J. F. Petars duction of coal.

"mechanization" will yield steady employment and high wages to skilled and educated labor, and that periodic strikes have contributed to the trend to machinery.

There was a feeling among the operators that the industry is stabilizing itself, principally by the introduction of machines. There was also optimism in regard to labor relations.

L. E. Young, vice-president of the Pittsburgh Coal Company, set the date Sept. 6, 1926, as the beginning of the sixth era in the history of American coal mining On that day. American coal mining. On that day the first state contract dealing with wages of operators of mechanical loading devices was signed in Illi-nois, and the tonnage mechanically produced has jumped from 2.9 strongly urges universal landing and traffic rules for all landing fields, as the most effective measure for safety ment of the procedure.

A Cresson medal to I can be considered for the coupling of the procedure of the procedure.

Mechanical Installations Machines are making it possible to mine anthracite veins as thin as stated.

The Hudson Coal Company, Scranford, Pa., now is producing with a force of 28 men as compared with 69 required formerly. The Scranford Coal Company has increased productions of the production o Coal Company has increased production per miner 2.2 tons and reduced the average cost 24 per cent over hand mining by the installation of ployees is being doubled by machines, he said.

Another development is the attention being paid to education of the rank and file of the miners. West Virginia State University is conducting mining extension courses, short classes for the rank and file and more advanced ones for foremen. Some mines are holding monthly meetings, in which every phase of mining operation is discussed. By this means alone, said C. P. Anderson, McDonald, W. Va., it is possible to give every laborer a gradual and thorough education in the work.

Mills to Reopen in South Carolina

Workers in Several Plants Accept New Agreement on Pay and Conditions

GREENVILLE, S. C. (A) - Em-GREENVILLE, S. C. (A')—Employees of Brandon Mills and the Brandon Duck Mill will return to work May 20, under an agreement reached with officials of the Brandon Corporation and accepted by a unanivote of the workers

Some adjustments were also made in pay.

ELIZABETHTON, Tenn. (A) -Adit. Gen. W. C. Boyd of Tennessee was arrested here May 17 on a warrant charging "aiding and abetting an attempt to commit murder," sworn out by Evelyn Heatong, a striking textile orker, injured by an automobile that dashed through a group of pick-eters who blocked the road. He was released on $1000 bond.

STANDARD OIL (N. J.) EARNINGS EXPAND

NEW YORK, May 17 (49)—The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, largest of the oil companies, in its annual report for 1928 showed a consolidated income of $108,185,686, compared with $10,122,758 in 1927. The earnings are equivalent to $4.43 a share on the 24,184,219 capital shares of $25-par value outstanding at the end of the year. The 1927 earnings were $1.52 a share.

The report, which covered the first complete year in which the company operated as a holding company, with the actual operations carried on by subsidiary companies, indicates that the company participated in the general recovery from the oil depression of 1927. Last years earnings were mearer those of 1926 when the company agreed $117,652,201, and in 1925 when earnings amounted to $111,231. NEW YORK, May 17 (49)-The

Spontaneous Combustion, Say Fire Wardens - Plumber Reports Leaking Steam

CLEVELAND, O. (A)-Spontaneous ombustion in an overheated store- ence. oom caused the fire and explosions which wrecked the Cleveland Clinic Ruilding and caused 1927 february H. Hyde, Secretary of Agri-Building and caused 127 fatalities fire wardens here report.

The heat came from a leaky steam pipe in the basement, Deputy Wardens Max Gross and R. T. Ferrie, who made an investigation, declare. It was the story of Bofferty Bogg, a plumber, who was sent to repair the pipe, which led to the investigation and decision that the heat caused the flames which liberated clouds of gases. Mr. Bogg told the authorities he found the fire-proof door to the vault open, and the place where the films were kept full of steam, presumably from a leaky pipe. He was unable to find the leak, however, and finally noticed a brown sticky substance on the ceiling from which steam seemed 46 be issuing. He used a fire extinguisher with no effect and was overcome a few min-utes later by the gas. As he was attempting to crawl out of the room. he said, an explosion lifted him through the door and he eventually reached the street.

FRANKLIN MEDAL NEW YORK CURB REWARDS WORK IN TWO FIELDS

Year's Honors Accorded to Dr. Wilson of England and Dr. Berliner

BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT PHILADELPHIA—Dr. Charles T. R. Wilson of Cambridge University, England, and Dr. Emile Berliner of Washington have just received Franklin medals from the Franklin Institute, in its yearly recognition of contributions and achievements in the advancement of the modern sci-ences. The award to Dr. Wilson was received by Sir Esmé Howard, British Ambassador to the United States. The Franklin medal is regarded as one of the highest honors conferred by any American institution. It was presented to Dr. Wilson for pioneer research and contributions to atomic physics, and to Dr. Berliner for his work in originating and making adaptable the microphone as well as for other advances in sound recording and reproducing devices.

Cresson medals were awarded to Sir James C. Irving, vice chancellor and principal of St. Andrew's University. Scotland, for contributions to the knowledge of organic chemistry; and to Elmer A. Sperry, of Brooklyn,

COTTON PRICES OFF AFTER RISE

NEW YORK (A)-The cotton mar-

NEW YORK (P)—The cotton market opened at an advance of 6 points to a decline of 1 point, generally 3 to 6 points higher on covering and some local or commission house buying, promoted by relatively steady Liverpool cables and builtish private crop reports from Texas.

July sold up to 18.77, and December to 18.86 during the first few minutes, or about 6 to 8 points net higher, but the market met considerable realizing at these figures, and just about lost its advance by the end of the first half hour.

A few May notices were reported in circulation, leading to some liquida-tion of that position which, however, was absorbed at a fairly well main-tained premium over July. Private cables reported covering and continental buying in Liverpool, and that demand for cotton cloths from India was maintained.

FRENCH ROAD HAS GOOD INCOME GAIN

PARIS—Est Railway report for 1928 shows operating receipts at 2.196.979,-600 francs, approximately 329,000,000 francs above the 1927 total, white operating expenses were 4,491,991 600, an increase of 36,000,000. Operating ian increase of 36,000,000. Operating ratio was 67,91 per cent, compared with 77 per cent, while net operating profits were 704,988,000 francs, compared with 423,227,000. Capital charges increased by 33,000,000 to 318,249,000 and after allowance for premiums to company and personnel (7450,000) guaranteed interest on shares, etc., a balance of 10,100,000 francs remained for company railway fund, compared with less than 5,000,000 last year.

Company has declured dividend of 52,50 francs (against 50) on 346,737

52.50 frames (against 50) on 348.737 shares of 500 frames and 32.50 (against 30) on 237.763 "actions de jouissance" (capital repaid), for which 25,915,000 frames are needed. President Renaudin stated the company was in process of converting its 1924 6 per cent and 7 per cent bonds into ones of 5 per cent or less and added that he contemplated later conversion of the 7 per cent American dollar loan, now figuring at around $12,000,000.

A Quotation for Today

Who: JOHN BUNYAN.

Where: England. When: Seventeenth century.

One Minute

Why famous: An English preacher and the author of "Pilgrim's Prog- in 1571. ress." His father sold pots and ket tles and the son was born into lowly circumstances, yet he met with kindness and care, having been sent to the schools of his native Bedford. Later he took up his father's trade of tinker and, if we are to accept Bunyan's own description of himself, he became a rough, uncouth and blasphemous fellow. For a short time he fought in the civil wars, though historians are at variance as to whether he was on the side of the Royalists or on that of the Par-liamentarians. When about 20 years old he married a young woman of gentleness and piety who taught him to read the Bible. It is also related that, while walking one day, he over-heard three women who were "sit-ting at a door and talking about the things of God." Whatever it was precisely which took place in his con-sciousness as a result of those hap penings, it is clear that he wen through a prolonged mental and spiritual struggle. In 1653 he joined the Bedford church and, after he had been "about five or six years awak ened," he began to preach. Bunyan's blunt speech and uncom-promising ways offended some, yet others crowded to hear him and felt Bunyan's blunt speech and uncompromising ways offended some, yet others crowded to hear him and felt the force of his conviction. Soon he found himself arrested for preaching outside the regular churches; and, with brief intervals of freedom, he remained in prison for 12 years. The seclusion profited him to reflect upon spiritual things and to record his thoughts in various books. When released, he became minister of the Bedford church; yet he endured still Bedford church; yet he endured still be became minister of the seclusion of the period of the profit of the profit of the profit of the stans of the stans of the stans of the stans of the posed Beth after the bowls were filled. "Courtesy" is the practical applicharacterize persons at court. It goes a step beyond the manners of the city, or civility, for "civil" comes from the Latin civis, which means "a citizen," and "courtesy" is from the French cour for "court." "Civility' indicates adherence to the bare formulities of good mainers, but as we find more ceremony at a court than in the general life of a city, so "courtesy" denotes a polite-ness and graciousness which is charming and habitual.

We find some persons who think that "courtesy" means merely having elegant manners, but true courtliness is much deeper than that; it is the ssence of well-bred kindliness and ensideration of others; it is a daily xemplification of graciousnes A single act of kindness or the be

Rhodes House

THE recent opening of Rhodes House in the University of Oxford marked a further stage in the development of the activities of the Rhodes Scholarship system. Cecil Rhodes was that comparatively rare person, a dreamer of dreams and a man of action. Though he was the organizer of great industries, Prime Minister of Cape Colony for about five years, and the founder of Rhodesia, he nursed during the whole of his life an even grander dream, the unity of the English-speaking peoples for the purpose of extending liberty and justice and of ending war among men.

This vision he conceived when little more than a boy working in the diamond fields of Kimberley. From time to time during the rest of his life he drew up wills leaving his estate to be used for the promotion of this vision. By 1900, the date of his last will, he had come to the conclusion that the best method of bringing about the establishment of a reign of just law over the whole earth was to bring picked specimens of the youth of all the English-speaking peoples together in the residential system of the University of Oxford so that they might get to know one another and become interested in public affairs.

He prescribed in detail the type of scholar he desired. He was to be a man of good intellectual attainments, of high moral character and of active physique, who had given signs of leadership and of love for his fellow students in his school days. Rhodes believed that men of that type from the New World brought together in a famous university of the Old World would 'come to esteem the performance of public duties in after life as their highest aim" and would work on their own initiative for the great cause he had at heart.

It says much for the penetration of Cecil Rhodes's thinking that he began to cherish these ideas nearly fifty years ago and that they are obviously beginning to be realized today. The ratification of the Kellogg pact and the promising foundation for naval disarmament which was laid at Geneva a few weeks ago when Mr. Gibson, on President Hoover's behalf, said that the basis of any agreement must be the ruling out of all possibility of war, bring nearer the day when the English-speaking nations will be united in helping to outlaw war and to organize the reign of peace, liberty and justice over the whole earth

Rhodes House itself has been erected by the Rhodes trustees to commemorate the ideals of the founder and to be of service to the University at Oxford. Rhodes scholars themselves will have no special place in the building, for their home is in the colleges. But the building contains a special library of the literature and history of the English-speaking peoples, a great hall for lectures and meetings, a reading room, and common rooms for studies and social gatherings of all kinds. It will certainly be an addition both to the scholastic equipment and the amenities of Oxford.

Why Not Abolish Passports?

THE reduction of the visa fees which must be paid by American travelers visiting France, from the present figure of $10 to $2, marks another forward step in the State Department's endeavor to do away with what has become a heavy burden on the traveling public. Before the war American passports cost $2, and the expense of the visas, which were requisite in some instances for admission to foreign countries, was practically negligible. The war, which brought all sorts of unexpected financial burdens, raised the prices of passports and of visas in most instances to $10. This might seem a small figure in the total cost of a European journey, but when it is exacted for each member of a party traveling together it becomes exceedingly burdensome. The rule, too, is full of absurd and illogical features. A man and wife, for example, require but one visa to enter any country, while three sisters traveling together would have to pay $30.

The State Department has been busy since 1924 trying to get this tax on American travelers reduced or repealed. Of course, in every instance in which a foreign country reduces its visa charge reciprocal action is taken by the United States for the benefit of the citizens of that country. At the present moment Great Britain is the only first-class power adhering to the full measure of this exaction. Of the nations commonly visited by tourists, Denmark, Belgium, Germany, Italy and Sweden have abolished the visa fee altogether. It is fair to point out that these changes affect the treasuries of the foreign countries more than they do that of the United States. They are really asked to sacrifice something material. For example, the reduction by the French Government of its charge, it is estimated, will cost France about $2,000,000 a year, and the United States only about $100,000, since the number of French tourists visiting the United States is vastly less.

The measure of success already attained by the State Department in its endeavors to reduce these charges upon American tourists ought to lead to an endeavor to correct, as a sort of reciprocal favor, the difficulty and expense incurred by foreign visitors to the United States. While the head tax collected from every visiting tourist on landing is refunded if he leaves America within sixty days, there are many features relative to its collection and the limitations upon his stay that are irritating and unfair. As a matter of fact, now that peace seems to envelop the whole world, it would be a sensible and a useful thing if the whole passport system could be abolished.

The Age of Opportunity

PROBABLY no more comprehensive survey of the resources, both physical tial, which are the possession and heritage of the people of the United States has ever been made than that just completed under the direction of the Committee on Recent Economic Changes, the chairman and directing head of which is President Herbert Hoover. The work, in its finished form, is referred to as "The Hoover Blue-Print of Prosperity." The alias is not a misnomer, for such the findings prove to be in their main essentials. There is revealed to the student the foundations upon which rests the superstructure which has been reared by American initiative and endeavor. Likewise, there is outlined, clearly and distinctly, the process or method which, if followed, will reasonably insure continued progress and a still more remarkable growth, economically and materially.

The important fact impressed upon the people of the present generation is that this is the age of opportunity. The tendency too often is to assume that those who have already come along the way have pre-empted or monopolized the real means of true achievement. But such beliefs are corrected by the finding of the analysts that the present and the future offer greater promise than the past. It should be realized, however, that just as those who laid these foundations and built upon them, as they found opportunity and as they were encouraged by evidence of progress, assumed for themselves a great responsibility, so those who today have enlisted to carry on the work are charged with responsibilities which cannot be shirked or escaped. "Our situation is fortunate, our momentum is remarkable," the committee finds, "yet the organic balance of our economic structure can be maintained only by hard, persistent and intelligent effort; by consideration and sympathy; by mutual confidence and by a disposition in the several human parts to work in harmony together."

Perhaps to the casual or careless reader and student nothing surprisingly new or especially important will appear in the observation quoted. It may be felt that all this and much more has been said before, and that despite solicitous advice and gratuitous warnings the march of material progress has not been perceptibly slackened or interrupted. There have been crises in the past in which the common welfare has been threatened or imperiled by powerful and aggressive selfish influences, sometimes political, always destructive. These, by fortuitous circumstances and by the conscious rallying of progressive activity, have been subdued or overcome. But they have not yet been overwhelmed or subjugated. They continue to menace, as throughout all past history, the constructive efforts of those who build. It is against these untoward influences that the forces of progressive and righteous government must ever array themselves. And to those who observe keenly and not with superstitious fear the situation as it exists today, it is apparent that the need now of such mobilization, because of the tremendous material progress which has been made, is no less than in the past. Indeed, it may be that the need is greater than ever, due to the rich prize which might be won by possible conquest.

In the Capitol at Washington there is being waged, strangely enough in the name of what is claimed to be political freedom and independence, an internecine warfare which to many unprejudiced observers is destructive in its objects in November last, the people of the United States decided to accept the platform of Herbert Hoover and his party as their own for the ensuing four years. It was a constructive and progressive platform, outlining a program of national legislation which, it was agreed, promised a continuance of that social and material development acceptable to the Nation as a whole. And yet almost from the day of the opening of the present extraordinary session of Congress there has been interposed an organized and possibly effective opposition to the legislative agenda circumstantially approved by the electors at the polls. It was not desired, of course, that constructive opposition to President Hoover's prearranged program should be silenced by the verdict of the people. Indeed, it was hoped that by the very processes employed in the campaign and in the voting booths a new and definite warrant of authority had been given which would support and encourage the establishment, or re-establishment, of political or partisan parity.

Evidently the language and import of that warning were misapprehended or misunderstood. There has been a return to the practices of obstruction and the ineffective and discredited weapons of sectionalism.

It is not with such weapons that the battle of real progress is won. It is not under the banner bearing the legend, 'The Hoover Blue-Print of Prosperity," that those who take up such weapons of warfare march.

Freedom of Speech and the Press

THE latest news from Madrid makes it clear that Gen. Primo de Rivera has decided to lift his embargo on news from Spain, a censorship which the Dictator himself now admits has operated to falsify conditions in Spain rather than to help to present them in a truer picture. In these days when the relations between countries rest so definitely and so intimately upon the understanding which prevails between the peoples themselves, it is vital that public opinion throughout the world should be premised upon the free interchange of news.

This interchange will best come from a free and independent press. Primo de Rivera's recent experience is excellent proof of that fact, for a government which suppresses all news unfavorable to its own position can hardly inspire confidence in its own statements. A free press must be recognized not only as a right of the people but also as a protection to the Government. Coincident with this dispatch from Madrid, President Portes Gil has given assurance that absolute liberty of speech, thought and action shall prevail during the forthcoming Mexican presidential election, at which his successor is to be chosen. And as a testimony to his good faith, and notwithstanding the rather precarious conditions following the rebellion, he released political speakers who were recently arrested because of remarks critical of government officials.

The greater liberality which Primo de Rivera has shown toward the press, and the determination of President Portes Gil to preserve political liberty, are both favorable developments, for the curtailment of these cherished zights has usually been accompanied, as history has repeatedly shown, by policies of injustice and reaction.

So This Is a Book!

THE booksellers who sell over counters in A shops, and the booksellers who sell by subscription club plan, are exasperated with each other. The booksellers (shop) complain that the booksellers (subscription) drive away an increasingly unhappy-or perhaps happypercentage of patronage by selling a given number of books at a price under list. In consequence the bookshop business languishes.

The booksellers (subscription) complain because the booksellers (shop) do not perceive that there is business enough for all; they wish booksellers (shop) to see that booksellers (subscription) merely tickle the public palate for books by issuing twelve, or sixteen, or eighteen books a year. That the booksellers (subscription), by this means, cause the public to exclaim, "So these are books! Well, well, I must have some more!" and that it then becomes the duty and privilege of the booksellers (shop) to gather in the harvest. On the point at which the booksellers (shop) accuse the booksellers (subscription) of driving away trade, the booksellers (subscription) suggest that trade which can be driven away when it has taken ownership of twelve, or sixteen, or eighteen books, as the case may be, is essentially lazy trade and would not, in any event, contribute much to the bookseller (shop) bank balance in the long run. If this is so, then the booksellers (subscription) primarily affect two groups: one which it is introducing, by a sort of hors d'œuvre method. to the unlimited treasuries of reading and which will probably never thereafter stop anyhow at owning twelve books a year; the other group which requires many more than that number of books each year, and therefore, because of the limits of the calendar, buys them in bookstores.

Nor is the controversy over the merits and demerits of either booksellers (shop) and booksellers (subscription) restricted to those engaged directly-in the business of selling books (shop or subscription.) Many eminent literary figures, professors of English and critics have risen to disparage the book-of-the-month club idea as one smacking of standardization of culture and so of doubtful seemliness. Still others, eminent literary figures, professors of English and critics, have risen to defend the idea as one which, at its very worst, does seem to put people in touch with books who might, for one reason or another, not put themselves in touch with books; and as such a means, the book club idea becomes an handmaid of culture.

It is safe to assume that booksellers (shop or subscription) are primarily interested in selling books. The bookseller (subscription) modestly so, for he is equipped only to sell less than twenty books each year. In these garrulous days it is a poor reader, indeed, who stops at twenty books a year. The bookseller (shop) wishes to sell as many as he possibly can to every customer he can acquire, during the year.

The bystander may very well suppose that there could be no harm in talking matters over. Of course neither bookseller (subscription) nor bookseller (shop) wishes to see or is working for the standardization of taste in books. On the other hand, may there not be something for the booksellers (shop) in the certainly very interesting if not flawless book-club idea of the booksellers (subscription) which might be taken by the booksellers (shop) and adapted to their own uses? The booksellers (subscription) would probably not cry "Thief! Thief!" and certainly something more nearly approaching the standards of peace and dignity and good will that have long been the strength of the art of making and selling books would thus be restored.

A Pen Prick Against the Sword

The history of civilization thus consists principally in the replacement of war by law. History is largely the story of the enlargement of the peace group—from the family, which was the first peace group, to the town, or community, which was the next peace group, to the state, and to the nation and each step has been made possible ossible by court Inving Fisher.

Editorial Notes

While new books and new pictures are always in demand, old books and old masters still receive much attention in the libraries and art galleries of the world. Is there not a thought in this for the motion picture producers? What parent does not look back to some of the finer pictures of several years ago, and wish that their children might be enabled to view them?

One of the large insurance underwriting companies of the United States has adopted a 10 per cent reduction in automobile accident insurance rates, available to drivers who for two years prior to taking out their policies have not been involved in motor accidents. Another proof that safety pays.

Recent shifts in plus and minus signs in the stock quotation tables lead one to ponder the canny comment of Russell Sage. Questioned by one eager to take advantage of his financial judgment as to how he amassed his fortune, he replied: "I buy my straw hats in the fall."

Electric lights have superseded candles at George Washington's estate, Mount Vernon. It's easier to push a button and, besides, how many today know how to snuff a guttering tallow dip?

Unpublished Chapters of "Looking Backward"

(WITH APOLOGIES TO EDWARD BELLAMY)

[In "Equality," written ten years after "Looking Back-ward" as its sequel, Mr. Bellamy has Julian West say: "It may seem strange to my readers that I have not had more to say of the wonder excited in my mind by the number and character of the great mechanical inventions and applications unknown in my day, which contribute to the material fabric and actuate the mechanism of your civilization. I can only say, by way of explanation to this seeming indifference to the mechanical wonders of this age, that had they been ten times more marvelous, they would still have impressed me with infinitely less astonishment than the moral revolution illustrated by your new

In this second book, the author refers to "air cars," "electric motor" conceyances, submarines and a combina-tion of the telephone and electroscope, which enabled one to hear and see at a distance as in modern television, though without elaborating upon the possibilities of these inventions or forecasting the control of gravity.]

TT WAS now a fortnight since my strange experience of waking in the closing year of the twentieth century after a sleep of 113 years. The absence of noise and the scarcity of traffic especially intrigued me as I passed through the peaceful, clean, orderly streets on my customary morning ramble.

When I returned home, breakfast was already served.

With an arch smile Edith asked: "Have you named all your fingers with questions about this curious twentiethcentury Boston?"

Laughingly I admitted that I had. My first question caused much merriment. I had asked if they still indulged in horse racing.

"What strange creatures you must think us, Julian!" laughed my betrothed. (Since our betrothal she had assumed this familiar appellation in addressing me.) "Of course there are no money prizes, but we have yacht races, horse races, all sorts of races."

was just wondering if the record of Maud S. had ever been broken. In 1885 she made a record of a mile in two minutes and eight and three-fourths seconds-a most incredible speed!'

Dr. Leete smiled indulgently, as he answered my query: "The record now is several seconds under two minutes 1 1 1

"Formidable, nothing less than formidable," I gasped. "And railway trains have probably reached a hundred miles an hour. Such speed is unbelievable. Much of my distress in the old régime was caused by the terrific speed and noise of traffic. An imaginative writer of the period, Jules Verne, a name doubtless unknown to you, in a fantastic tale actually predicted that sometime the world would be girdled in eighty days. Absurd as the idea was, it caused much speculation.

My hosts exchanged glances difficult of characterization. Remarked Dr. Leete: "The history of speed is a long and interesting one. We would best leave it for discussion till this evening when we can go into it fully. In the meantime you might be interested to peruse some books on the history of transportation and the making of roundthe-world records."

'Only for an hour," protested my betrothed. "Julian and I are going to look at apartments this morning."

Within the next hour I read of actual achievement that overreached the wildest predictions of my times, and these covered but the first forty-two years of my long sleep; what the seventy-one remaining years to 2000 had brought forth in miracles of transportation I dared not even investigate for the present, so great was my con-

I discovered that only two years after I fell asleep, a young American newspaper girl with the pseudonym of Nellie Bly had made the first round-the-world record, and that in seventy-two days and some hours! The subsequent history is familiar to everyone except myself-how record was gradually reduced by the invention of automobiles, airplanes and fast boats to twenty-three days in the year 1928—a record outclassing the moon. As I read of the roaring motors, the congestion of traffic, the armies of pedestrians marshaled by uniformed officers at the-intersections of streets and of the mobs at places of amusement, I was grateful to have slept through this. speed-crazed period. When I came upon the jocular prediction of one Arthur Brisbane that humanity would in time whiz around the earth in no more time that it takes that orb to make one revolution on its axis, I closed the book with a smile and went to keep my appointment with my fair betrothed.

That evening, after the ladies had left us, Dr. Leete broached the subject of the morning. "My friend of a former generation," he began, "purposely have I refrained from discussing the whole matter of modern transportation and mechanical invention, well knowing your aversion to noise and speed, till such a time as you should be sufficiently imbued with the peace and tranquillity of your present surroundings not to be distressed by such a

From your reading this morning you doubtless learned that all the predictions of Jules Verne, except visiting the center of the earth and the moon, have been realized. And as for the moon, by the means of powerful teles are practically as familiar with its conditions and topography as with our planet. The bottom of the sea is as well known as the south pole or the summit of Mt. Everest. And aviation has so far outdone Jules Verne's trip in a balloon as to make it seem antediluvian. 'Round the World in Eighty Days' is still the most famous trip, based as it was on accurate knowledge, and next to it Nellie Bly's. These set the standards, which others merely imitated. Verne's hero, Phileas Fogg, is as well known as any actual figure in history.

"You may be grateful to have slept through the next sixty years when speed became the principal goal. Beginning at a slow pace as 'horseless carriages,' automobiles continued to accelerate in speed till they could be driven so fast that they became invisible, like the propeller of an airplane. This, of course, was not practical, as the driver could no longer see the road without specially prepared lenses. Great speedways were built from coast coast and between all large cities. These had lanes for different rates of speed, the highest speed permitted being 200 miles an hour. At this rate the car was a blur and the driver barely visible. People complained however, that this was too sluggish. So special speedways, carefully walled in and with no crossroads, were built and the cars directed exteriorly, if you know what I mean, by radio. The speed gradually crept up to about 400 miles, but that did not long satisfy people.

"Then an entirely new method of travel was introduced. Huge projectiles were comfortably equipped with seats and catapulted from coast to coast. This method, though now somewhat antiquated, is still in use, especially in traveling toward the east."

"But, but, at that rate, you can't enjoy the scenery."

"Quite true," laughed Dr. Leete, "but most people of that period did not bother with scenery. Well, I for one am glad that that period is past. The idea of hurling eneself about in order to reach a place is practically done away with in these days in which by static methods of travel we can circle the globe in twenty-four hours without turning a hair."

My astonishment was too great to enable me even to gasp. Moreover, I was convinced that my genial host had now left the realm of fact and entered that of fancy, so I listened in amused silence as he continued with his pleasantries.

"During this epoch the earth became so clamorous and noisy that most people preferred living in houseplanes at a sufficient level above it to be assured of quiet and tranquillity. Everybody flitted about in mothplanes with as little concern as our ancestors walked. Airships traversed the oceans with ever-increasing speed. And one may see them yet, though not so frequently."

"So they have gone back to ocean liners," I commented.

"After all, this method of travel strikes me as more normal." "By no means, my dear fellow! But we had best leave the present method of travel for future discussion. And now to bed," suggested my host, rising and accompanying me to my sleeping chamber. After setting the musical telephone for seven in the norning, and turning on a soothing, dreamy air to lull me to sleep, he bade me a hearty good night. Shutting out from my thought the hideous picture of noise and speed drawn by my future father-in-law, I reflected that humanity had not only survived this terrific ordeal, but come into an era of unprecedented peace and well-being, and that whatever onstaughts future generations might experience, the world would, after all, never "go to the dogs." During this most trying period some counter-influence and tendency must have been at work, which resulted in the present Utopian conditions. With this thought I was lulled to sleep.

From the World's Great Capitals—Paris

THE garden city movement in France is introducing a new feature in suburban life. Can we say that it was borrowed from America? It is the razing of walls and fences and the formation of continuous lawns, or gardens separated by low borders. Those who know America think that one of the charms of the residential districts is the free stretch of well-mown grass before the nomes, broken only by the cement paths to the front doors, and roadways to the garages. The leading weekly pictorial of France, l'Illustration, not long ago devoted an entire issue to the present building activity of this country. This has shown the growth of the community centers and the beginning of friendly spaces before the cottages where no barriers exist and yet property rights are respected.

An amusing cartoon in one of the newspapers showed knights in armor and their ladies in fifteenth century brocades and high headdresses emerging from the Grand Palais to step into taxis. This actually did occur. The quinquennial fêtes in honor of Joan of Arc were witnessed by President Doumergue, and included more than 1000 participants, among whom were many members of the old noble families of France. The costumes were remarkable. No expense was spared to portray exactly the fine robes of the time of the Maid of Orleans. There were feats by jugglers, dances, jousts, archery, and other games The illusion was maintained until the great spectacle was over and the scramble began to find one's automobile, or taxi, or autobus.

Out on the southern edge of Paris has grown a campus much after the English or American pattern. This is the international student center for those attending the University of Paris, or the Sorbonne. Such a campus was the first of its kind in France, but now word has come from the University of Nancy that work has begun to prepare a "student city" on much the same lines as this of the Sorbonne. The park, with its château of Monbois, has been purchased, and within this extensive domain are to be erected dormitories. Playing fields presumably, are also to be laid out. Naney, formerly capital of the Duchy of Lorraine, is and historic city situated on the River Meurthe. The authorities of the four departments into which Lorraine is now divided are giving the scheme their full support and some financial aid.

. . . M. Louis Thomas, writing in l'Intransigeant, has put forward the proposal that Parliament pass a law requiring all communes of more than 10,000 to construct special diffees given over to library work. He says that French people as a whole are not reading enough and that new and more attractive libraries must be made ready for them. He finds even in Paris a situation which could be improved. The district libraries are often difficult to find and not particularly inviting places. For this reason they are not well patronized. The famous Bibliotheque Nationale, magnificent as it is, is primarily an institution for research workers, and the other large libraries are also chiefly for students. The implied criti-

PARIS cism in this case was meant constructively and was knows what benefits to communities the well-lighted and attractive libraries bring.

> The tone of the big Paris revues is improving, according to one teacher of dancing whose business it is to keep in touch with these productions. Gradually during the past year the movement has been growing to clothe the choruses in period or national costumes and to require a far higher standard of dancing. A conspicuous example of this is the new revue at the Palace Theater headed by Miss Raquel Meller and called "Paris-Madrid." She has employed a single Spanish theme-itself unusual considering the customary miscellaneous character of a revue The costumes were made with great thought, and she used for a street scene a gypsy carnival, with a troupe of musicians and dancers from Spain. Miss Meller herself in such an atmosphere could scarcely have been heard or seen to better advantage.

> A surprising number of changes are constantly taking place in the museums of France, and it is probably in part this fact which has led to the appearance of a monthly "Bulletin des Musees de France." This would be invaluable for anyone expecting to visit the museums in the cities or towns which he will take in on his travels. The bulletin is well illustrated and contains an article of two on some especially important change which has occurred in a museum during the previous month. There are in addition useful notes about this or that work of art in various French museums, and the new acquisitions are described or simply mentioned, according to their importance.

Street singing is to be given a certain professional standig in the community. There were those who wished to anish these singers entirely from Paris, but there arose all more to plead for them. The result, it is understood, is that their singing is to be regulated. The singers are to draw lots for positions on the boulevards, and then to rotate so as to avoid a congestion of singers at the most lucrative corners and places. No longer will the street inger have to cut his song short at the approach of a policeman; instead, the singer will probably be more vocal than ever in an effort to prove to the "gardien do la paix" that a true tunefulness is being contributed to la paix' that a true time time the otherwise monotonous noise of the day

* * * The French people are peculiarly happy in their selection of names. The day has been set for the holding by the commune of Bièvres of its Strawberry Fair—its Foire aux Fraises. The valley in which Bievres is situated is a sunny one south of Paris; and its strawberries in June are the pride of the countryside. Who would not want to go to a Strawberry Fair? Another equally intriguing name for a fair is that of the Gingerbread Fair-the Foire aux Pains d'Epice. This is a Paris fair where hot gingerbread can be eaten and side shows be entered. All manner of amusements are offered. Who could resist ions to the Gingerbread Fair and the Strawberry Fair? All those would go who have never grown up.
